Infinite numbers of threads,
are weaving us together, in a timeless tapestry of lived life, lived spirits, lived dreams and lived family lines.

My future connective threads are the physical result of lived life in togetherness.
My delicate structures come alive in good company.
May it be humans, landscapes, horizons, sounds, feelings, animals, stories, music, plants or magical spirits.

This is how I mediate.

My creation of space.
My creation of worlds to mediate inside of.
For myself, or for others.

I mediate with the loom.

Past and future meet in the loom window.
The loom is the heart where I store memories.

I love the magical unfolding of trust.
When I trust a friend's love and my friend feels this trust, the love amplifies like raindrops on water and a beautiful flow begins, beyond anything I've tried earlier on.

It is always a new love.
A new improvised unique energy-merge comes alive,
based on love and trust.

This is how I mediate.
I am grateful to own the sensibility to feel the landscape.
This brings great power in speaking the words of nature, when entering plant age.

A special heartfelt thanks to all of my beautiful friends for your strong, committed and emotional contributions to my body of work. Thank you for your love and your trust in the magical unknown nature of my work. Some of you I have known for a long time, and some of you I just met this year during my many residencies. Some of you are very young, some of you are older than me.

You are all very special to me, giving me a new sense of the world, and you are embodying my practice with me, in this beautiful publication: FANTASIA, made by dear Galerie Maria Wettergren.

Much love to all of you – Signe

CONNECTING HEAVEN AND EARTH

By Maria Wettergren

Past midnight about a year ago, just before falling asleep, I got a sudden urge to write to Signe Emdal. I had been admiring her soft, hypersensitive sculptures for a while, without having had the chance to offer her a collaboration yet. With a growing feeling that my proposal couldn't wait another minute, I stood up in the middle of the night and sent her an email. My intuition was confirmed the next morning by a laughing Signe, who told me that she had just cancelled a Skype meeting scheduled at noon with another interested gallery upon reception of my email! After a deep and spiritual phone conversation, lasting several hours, we agreed to start what must be qualified as one of my most inspiring artist collaborations.

Emdal's first solo exhibition at the gallery, Fantasia, appears as a fluid stream of works and places from Casa Balandra in Majorca to Rome, followed by Copenhagen and Skagen in Denmark. For the exhibition, the Danish artist has been working on a new family of textile sculptures, which she has delicately hand-woven in Icelandic wool, using her own fusion technique, Touch, based on a carpet knot technique and a special brushing, transforming the fibers into subtle layers of fur-like poetry.

Emdal's creative approach could be characterized as nomadic, ...searching for symbiotic energies in serene places to create works with an embracing ambience, to paraphrase the artist. For the past seven months, the artist - accompanied by her travel vertical carpet loom, watercolors and a vintage analogue camera - has been moving to new locations where she has explored ancient textile history, cultural history, site-specific colors and childhood memories, in the company of creative communities. Each place has generated one or several works: The Majorcan Ikat tradition was a great source of inspiration for Emdal's intense Mother of Fire, with its fiery, flaming pattern of blue and orange colors, whereas the Egyptian and Coptic textile heritages influenced Lady Pharaoh and Murex 4ever, with their strong purple nuances symbolic of cultural richness, exchange and wealth. Both Ikat weaving and Coptic textile tradition point towards the Silk Road, with its abundance of trade in textiles, precious items and knowledge, travelling through time and history. Combined, they have had a significant influence on Emdal's rainbow-like Silky Way. The enigmatic work, Murex 4ever, born from a marriage of Mediterranean culture and the windy, wild landscapes of North Jutland, leads the way to another Skagen work, the poetic Piccolo Pellicano. Like for the former work, Emdal is inspired by a little sea snail, not the Mediterranean Murex snail, which gave its precious purple color to centuries of art since the reign of the Phoenicians, but the Danish marine snail, the Pelicans Foot, emerging from the deep waters of the Northernmost point of Denmark, glistening under the sun on the beach of Skagen. Long after the snail has died, its presence lives on through its shell "...reminding us of eternity and the beauty we can leave behind."

Emdal characterizes herself as a textile composer, transforming emotions and ambiances into tangible textile structures, and her works are indeed ethereal and poetic like music. Influenced by nature and textile traditions of the past, yet with a strong futuristic appearance, her Touch works evoke hybrid aesthetics and timeframes, offering widespread associations, such as animal furs, butterflies, ceremonial artifacts and luscious parures. Sensitive and sensual, the wool sculptures vibrate with the slightest air and seem almost alive, like creatures from outer space, or exotic species from the deep-sea - another great inspiration to the artist, besides science fiction and music.

Emdal's way of working may seem close to the meaning of the Greek word phantasia, usually translated to "imagination". However, in Greek thought the word retains a connection with the verb phainomai, "I appear", which refers both to the psychological capacity to receive, interpret, and even produce appearances, as well as to those appearances themselves. Signe (and what a felicitous name!) receives and interprets phenomena, while producing new enigmatic appearances. She is spiritually and intellectually nourished by culturally rich places, and she considers the Fantasia exhibition as a long line of connective past and future threads, where movement and changes of scenery have had a great impact on her and her artworks. These cultures are not only studied, they are digested and absorbed through an intimate, spiritual process, turned towards nature and the universe. In the words of the artist: "I am inspired by ancient and indigenous cultural philosophies and their way of connecting sky and earth through handmade objects, with more than just respect for mother earth. They saw her as the boss."

Graduating from the Kolding School of Design in 2007 with an MA in textile design, specialized in Jacquard knitting techniques and conceptual textile structures, Emdal has fifteen years of experience with both handwoven and digital textile art, ranging from fashion textiles to highly complex art tapestries. Although very different from her Touch sculptures, it is interesting to note that her early works reveal the same inspirational sources and working methods, i.e. art history, ancient textiles, cultural and philosophical studies, feminism, interdisciplinarity and spiritual processes. One of her first important works, Astrid's Rose is a Jacquard knitted tapestry made in 2015, when the artist was invited by the National Gallery of Denmark for the group show Mix It Up to create a tapestry interpreted from a work in their permanent collection. Emdal's choice was a painting by the Danish painter, Astrid Holm (1876-1937), entitled Rose sets the Table (1914), significant, both from an aesthetic and political point of view: By focusing on the roses and the vibrant colors in Holm's painting - red, yellow and pink - Emdal has created a tapestry in which the atmospheric colors of the painting are woven into the structure of the textile, becoming the main theme. Emdal uses the flower explosion in the tapestry as a way of expressing the theme of emancipation presented in the painting, which is also core to Astrid Holm's own biography. As a female painter and tapestry weaver, Astrid Holm fought for female artists' rights and for the recognition of tapestry weaving as an art form. In Emdal's words: "I want Astrid's Rose to bloom. I want her to hold her head up high, look ahead and unfold in all her gentleness and strength, shining. Long enough, she has been standing in the shadow of her male modernist colleagues. This brave and powerful cosmopolitan paintress."

In 2016, Emdal continued her erudite research and symbiotic dialogues with historic works in museum collections when she obtained a grant from The Danish Art Foundation to translate her Jacquard knitted tapestries into digitally woven Jacquard tapestries at the Textiel Lab Tilburg in Holland. With her characteristic fondness of connecting past and future realms, the artist stays in a former medieval nunnery and created, in only five days, no less than four double-sided tapestries in linen and merino wool, inspired by ancient textile pieces from different museum collections: Blue Angel was drawn from a 3000-year-old indigo colored Japanese textile, whereas Turkish Angel was inspired by a Turkish Islamic miniature painting from around 1600. White Rose and Indian Rose were on the other hand influenced by an Indian textile work from around 1700, alongside medieval symbols.

Three years later, in 2019, Emdal was offered a solo exhibition at the Skagens Museum, dedicated to the famous Danish 19th century painter, Anna Ancher (1859-1935). Entitled Anna's Roots, the artist engaged in a deep dialogue with Anna Ancher via an installation of seven Jacquard knitted tapestries, interpreting the colors and ambiances from the painting Appraising the Day's Work (1883), painted jointly by Anna and Michael Ancher. Emdal's aim was to capture the substance of the Danish impressionist's work in an act of symbiotic creation. In the words of the artist... "My threads, colors and patterns are combined to create an essence of the knowledge we have concerning Anna Ancher and her close artistic collaborations with her husband Michael Ancher, connecting threads between the past and present."

Emdal's textile 'translation' of Ancher's painting is so vivid that some viewers feel as if the tapestries are animated with Ancher's spirit. Lisette Vind Ebbesen, the director of the museum, shares with us the following anecdote: "The other day, I heard someone standing in the room point to one of the tapestries and say: 'It looks like Anna Ancher' and I understand what she meant. You have a nice feeling that 7 new people have entered the room. 7 people whom you have never met before, but whom you still feel you know. I am impressed and very fascinated by the personality and intensity of the tapestries, colors and patterns. It is a very sensual experience, which leads one's thoughts to both images, people and spaces from the time of the Skagen painters, and thus binds past and present together in a very strong and fine way."

The sensual, almost animistic feeling that the woven works embody a spiritual presence reaches an unprecedented level in Emdal's Touch works, developed from 2018 onwards, starting with My Little Icelandic Pony, and followed by Mermaid, Khrysos, Tara 21 and Rosa C. The Icelandic wool seems to introduce a heightened attention to sensitivity and to textile as a living material in Emdal's work, and from this point forward, she has primarily unfolded her research through the delicate Icelandic wool, a natural fiber, which according to the artist is able to live, if treated the right way. For Emdal, it is crucial to "...let the fibers breathe and unfold in my hands, while guiding them slowly and protecting the wool, leaving space for the yarn to grow in its own pace. Just like mothers do..."

Care and softness are important qualities to Emdal, who offers gentleness as an alternative to cold and fast progress. The artist is interested in cultivating what she calls "...The superpower of sensitivity." She continues: "Without softness and gentleness, humans are nothing but boring mind-machines. Society has grown into habits of pushing hard to move forward, leaving no spaces, no room for love, no emotional appreciation...This has to change, and the first step is to learn how to even notice the subtle nuances. If humans cannot see them, feel them or value them, they can never learn to appreciate and collaborate with nature."

In order to observe the subtle nuances, a certain distance needs to be maintained. The Touch sculptures are, despite their name, not to be touched, regardless of their irresistible tactility. If they are touched, they are altered in their perfect, frosty appearance, like a finger in candy floss.

This paradox creates a sublime frustration, which not only heightens the pleasure of pure contemplation, but also provokes a feeling of awe and protection for the delicate creations or creatures (characteristically, Emdal often names her works like persons or animals, referring to them as she). They are fantasies, chimeras, and mysterious appearances... Please do not touch. Let yourself be touched.

EXHIBITED WORKS

Infinity Root, 2020-21
Mohair, merino wool, cotton warp
183 x 56 x 9 cm
Unique piece

With Infinity Root, Signe Emdal developed her fusion technique, Loop, based on a manual translation of the electric tufting machine. In this process, ongoing rows of loops with six thin mohair threads are delicately woven together with wool in a classic rug construction. With its pendulous, whispery threads, Infinity Root reflects the artist's fascination with mechanisms of plant communication and collaboration strategies. The extraordinary intelligence of plant systems, designed to sustain life on earth for millions of years, is often invisible to the human eye. Infinity Root represents in the words of the artist, "...a poetic symbol of the root of all life."

“ Our earth was formed 4.6 billion years ago. It was a red ball of fire - a hot mush of glowing and viscous magma. There were neither oceans nor continents. Energies, carbon and hydrogen formed the first organic substances. From these substances life developed and the earth cooled down slowly.

Today, our Earth is a blue planet, with oceans and continents. Our home together with millions of other species. For a peaceful and sustainable coexistence among all organisms, we need strong and vigorous roots. Let's cherish our roots and those of the world. For a better future, for us and nature. „

— Basil Thüring, geologist, co-director of Natural History Museum Basel

Palladio, 2021
Mohair, merino wool, cotton warp, ash wood
115,5 x 50,5 x 4 cm
Unique piece

Signe Emdal created her enigmatic work Palladio for the Homo Faber exhibition, "Crafting a More Human Future", in Venice in 2022. Inspired by the lace-like octagonal pattern of the terrace of Andrea Palladio's Basilica San Giorgio Maggiore on the island of San Giorgio Maggiore, the artist created a subtle, vibrating surface of infinite color transitions. Emdal wove it using her signature Loop technique, based on a manual translation of the electric tufting machine.

“ *She flows in incredible ways. Like water half frozen and metal half liquid – held together by the firm structure of interwoven threads. Like past and future. I am simultaneously transported to a 13th century European village, embedded in solidity and necessity, and to a spaceship, destination unknown. And I am between the sea and the beach. Right where water and sand have their wet, strange encounter. Where elements meet, exchange places and boundaries are repelled. Wilderness. A song tying me to the Earth and enticing me to open my eyes, lift my gaze towards the starry sky surrounding me and see in full the red planet. „

Mother of Fire, 2023

Icelandic wool, mohair, merino wool, cotton warp

73 x 71 x 27 cm

Unique piece

Signe Emdal created Mother of Fire in Majorca in the beginning of 2023, during an artist residency at Casa Balandra together with five other women artists from around the world. The artist considers the work as a blueprint of this experience, and a kind of visual diary. Emdal studied the local Ikat tradition and visited family-owned textile factories with 100-year-old looms while weaving the work onsite in the Balearic sunlight. In Majorca, the Ikat technique was named Fabric of Flames, interpreting the iconic pattern as flames, or fire, equally reflected in the principal colors of traditional Majorcan Ikat – white and blue with yellow and orange combinations – which are also found here in Emdal's work.

At night, Emdal would meet with the other artists in front of the fireplace to discuss the current blazing condition of the world and share cultural meals, stories and music, while keeping the fire going. Traditionally, the fireplace is at the heart of a household, where communities and families gather, sometimes to make offerings and access spiritual worlds. In ancient Rome, the sacred eternal flame was kept alight at The Temple of Vesta, run by women fire keepers. Emdal is inspired by fire as a symbol of the source of all life. As poetically expressed by the artist, "Your heart energy is your life force, your burning flame, your passion, your spirit, your special glimmer, your ethereal mystic gateway, and the reason for being alive. Like flames in a fireplace, your heart needs oxygen to glow, thrive and expand. The oxygen is community, unconditional love and being seen by others. Fire is not always controllable; it is messy and creates chaos. But fire inside your heart – as a metaphor – is not dangerous, it is beautiful and wild, and needs to be set free."

“ I’m trying to figure out what the title means Mother of Fire, I mean it’s kind of obvious, I guess that her name is Majorca sometimes I think I forget that it wasn’t us who invented fire just because we taught ourselves how to use it and to control it if control is the right word, maybe not

I’m trying to figure out who’s mothering who and why I can’t decide if it looks like mountains or a cardiogram how everything that’s solid once was fluid and maybe one day will be again

they look so radiant the yellow and the blue as they rub against each other and I’m trying to figure out how it is so I’m trying to figure out
why we see things clearly only just before they are about to change and turn into something else „

Silky Way, 2023
Icelandic wool, mohair, cotton warp
65 x 183 x 28 cm
Unique piece

The comet-like Silky Way was created in between Emdal's travel studies in Majorca, Paris and Rome, succeeding her studies of the Majorcan Ikat textile tradition, and during her investigations into Coptic Roman textiles ahead of her journey to Italy. Coptic textiles particularly flourished when the Roman Empire ruled Egypt and imported silk from China. Emdal is fascinated by the way that Coptic weavers made textile interpretations of the mythical ornaments, flowers and animals they saw on ceramic tiles and other objects. Both Ikat weaving and Coptic textiles point towards the Silk Road – the important trade route for silk and other valuable items, exchanged between Chinese and Roman emperors. The abundance of exchanges in the field of textiles, precious items and knowledge, travelling through time and history, is a great source of inspiration for Emdal, and her sumptuous Silky Way.

With its purple heart, the work equally reveals the artist's fascination with the color, initiating a series of work in which purple is a fundamental element. Historically, purple is of great symbolic importance, adopted by the Romans as a symbol of imperial authority and status, and at times reserved exclusively for the emperor, as shown in the mosaic portrait of Justinian I in the Basilica of San Vitale, Ravenna. A single gram of the prestigious purple dye was extracted from the glands of thousands of crushed sea snails; it was even more valuable than gold. In times when it was not restricted to just the emperor, people wore "copies" of the color in an attempt to appropriate this symbol of power.

“ Information reveals itself as I create with my hands, like threads that point back and forward in time in a shared abundant stream of colors. A Silky Way „

— Signe Emdal

Murex 4ever, 2023
Icelandic wool, Italian mohair, merino wool, Shetland wool warp
56 x 50 x 21 cm
Unique piece

Murex 4ever is as much a tribute to the rich heritage of Mediterranean cultures as to the wild landscapes of Signe Emdal's native Denmark, reflecting the artist's enthusiasm for historical studies, as well as her great sensitivity to nature. At the Danish Institute of Science and Art in Rome, the artist explored the color purple, made from the Murex sea snail, including its origins and historical influence on the Mediterranean cultures. Returning to Skagen, Denmark, from her residency in Rome, the artist was inspired by the windy landscapes, lights and colors of the North Sea coast. While weaving the work, she found herself surrounded by symbols of life and rebirth, such as a snakeskin shedding, and incorporated the never-ending cycle of life into her work, together with the Phoenician's purple, as a tribute to continuity and eternity.

Piccolo Pellicano, 2023

Icelandic wool, Italian mohair, merino wool, Shetland wool warp

46 x 46 x 19 cm

Unique piece

Piccolo Pellicano was created during Signe Emdal's studio residence at Klitgården in Skagen, on the North Sea coast, in a magisterial landscape surrounded by the sounds of waves and birds. The work bears trace of the special light in Skagen, a strong bluish hue, which feels like a combination of the powerful Mediterranean light and the Scandinavian blue atmosphere. Inspired by the shells on the beach, emerging from the sea and glistening in the sun, Emdal named her work Piccolo

Pellicano as a tribute to the small Danish marine snail, Aporrhais pespelecani, commonly referred to as Pelican's Foot. This snail has a very resistant shell and lives buried deep in the sand, up to 100 meters into the seabed, digging long 'breathing tunnels' through the sand to the surface. Emdal is touched by the force and transcendent beauty of the little snail, which, long after its death, is still present through its shell, "...reminding us of eternity and the beauty we can leave behind."

“Hands and memory carefully transforming mass to air.

A cloud of threads? A waving softscape of the Sea.

Changing blue tones and pellicano patterns to a misty landscape, on its journey to another form.

Present for now. „

ADDITIONAL TOUCH WORKS

My Little Icelandic Pony, 2018-19
Icelandic wool, Swedish cotton warp
45 x 70 x 23 cm
Unique piece

It was for My Little Icelandic Pony that Signe Emdal invented her fusion technique Touch, based on a carpet knot technique with Icelandic wool followed by a special brushing, transforming the wool into subtle layers of soft, fluffy fibers. The sculpture and the Touch technique were created during Emdal's residency in Iceland in 2018, "...in total peace and quiet, together with the wild Icelandic sea and the horses, and falling in love...", to paraphrase the artist. While weaving My Little Icelandic Pony, the artist listened to the Icelandic story-telling traditions, poetry and shepherds, looking out the window at the black mountains and stormy sea. The work reflects the energy layers of the human body and memory from physical interactions, revealing, "...our layers of invisible fur, wherein our living skin is the direct transition to a human's inner life – the heart."

“ *My little Icelandic pony, my little Icelandic pony
'What is friendship all about?'*

Din hud er som memory foam giver tålmodigt efter ved berøring hvilket ansvar det er at være en permanent impact

*Min krop er som en luftmadras, oppustet, udspændt, insisterer stædigt på at genindtage sin oprindelige form
ved berøring*

Kun ved punktering har nogen virkelig gjort en impact men heller ikke permanent

*Jeg tænker på, om friendship is all about at blive rørt at gøre sig øm
at lade sig bevæge
ikke at undvige, ikke at gøre sig hård at gøre sig blød, at tage imod og lade sig strigle bagefter*

jeg tror du er en god friend

*Du siger at 'Friendship is magic'
og jeg prøver at fatte det, så jeg kan nærme mig dig
My little Icelandic pony* „*

Khrysos, 2019-20
Icelandic wool, cotton warp
95 x 50 x 26 cm
Unique piece

For Khrysos, meaning 'spirit of gold' in ancient Greek, Signe Emdal was inspired by the sensitive fragility of the Mimosa flower, for which just a single touch might destroy the flower. The artist expresses this sublime state of fragility through her fusion technique, Touch, with its vibrant layers of lightweight Icelandic wool. The project began during Emdal's residency at The National Workshops for Art in Copenhagen in 2019 and culminated in a 28 days-long performance, entitled Mimosa Memory, for the 2020 annual spring exhibition at the Kunsthal Charlottenborg. The artist was invited with her loom to weave and complete her work at the museum, challenging the audience to keep a distance, be silent and to not touch the work. During the performance, the artist explored how it feels to work in a public space, while the public experienced the slow, silent birth of Emdal's delicate wool sculpture.

“*I see everything in you. Much more than the pixels convey.
Your soft plump skin defies the hard edges of those miniature light-emitting diodes.
Even as I sit here in the throes of an electric box, you reach out and embrace me.
You are butterfly and larva simultaneously frozen in time, and still your fibres are kindling.
Colored electrons are excited by your edges, yet their hue goes deeper than the digital permits.
I want to touch you. Feel your movement. Explore every point of your surface.
But for now, the pixels will have to do „*

Mermaid, 2021-22
Icelandic wool, Italian mohair, merino wool, Swedish cotton warp
220 x 80 x 23 cm
Unique piece

“ Its vibrant smear of blue caught my eye. The texture enticed me to touch it. I hesitated, I couldn’t. Instead, my gaze meticulously traced every intricate detail of that gentle blue with nuances of light and shadow.

I can sense the graceful breeze surrounding you, swaying, moving your gracious form in an ethereal dance. Your presence is a tranquil sanctuary, a reflection of your smooth matter.

Just as the heart of the ocean holds untold mysteries, your soul dwells in tranquil waters profound in a blend of fragility and strength. Like waves on the shore, gracefully you come, embraced by the whispers of the breeze.

Take me with you, dear mermaid „

Rosa C, 2022

Icelandic wool, mohair, merino wool, cotton warp

93 x 62 x 27 cm

Unique piece

Attracted by the aesthetic beauty of the rose, for her Rosa C sculpture, Signe Emdal was directly inspired by the hybrid French Rosa X Centifolia. It was only during the creative process that Emdal learned of its historical importance. Universally acknowledged as a symbol of beauty, many cultures have ancient traditions centered around the rose, some of which go back 40 million years, where it was first mentioned in Chinese and Sanskrit texts. Emdal is interested in the rose both as a simple icon of beauty and as a powerful cultural symbol of healing, love, happiness and purity. In the process of weaving the work, the artist challenged herself to approach nature's 'random skill', going against our human instinct to think in patterns and systems, as she produced a random color distribution on the loom, employing both her Touch and Loop techniques. With Rosa C, Emdal aimed to embody the power of the rose, its explosive movement, its sensitivity and sensuality, and its healing properties, on both the eyes and on the soul.

*When created by the hand of God through man.
Never will you stop blossoming, you ancient being.
Your smell persuades our senses, your edges reach our spirit.
Your feminine touch draws us to your soul.
Moving, dwelling and losing ourselves.
A solidified liquid, from sprouting to a beautiful decay.*

*Soft is your touch, if we dare to embrace.
We surrender our soul to the core of her world.
When you touch be soft as her skin.
When you speak be true as her kindness.*

*You are a blooming space, flowering till the end of time.
Opening up to our deepest desires.
Your colors allure our wonders.
Ever beyond physical understanding.*

*Your softness makes us aware of the human touch.
That's the love story of Rosa C. „*

Signe Emdal created Tara 21 with direct inspiration from the twenty-first Tara, the Hindu goddess of compassion and protection. With its vibrant textile layers, Emdal seeks to reveal the aspirations of today's younger generations, striving to build a new, more feminine world of subtle, sensitive and nuanced values, offering, "...a magic portal to a life of compassionate togetherness, embracing the multitude of complex layers of life today with each of its individual timelines flowing organically towards each other."

Lady Pharaoh, 2023

Icelandic wool, Italian mohair, merino wool, Shetland wool warp

91 x 55 x 18 cm

Unique piece

Exuberant and rich in meaning, Lady Pharaoh is a tribute to Egyptian textile art and traditions of the sacred art of weaving. Combining several weaving techniques, the sculpture is inspired by Egyptian textile offerings intended to protect the deceased in the afterlife, as well as by the traditional compositions of Coptic textiles. One of the oldest carpets in history was found in the tomb of Ramose and Hatnefer, the parents of Senenmut, steward and tutor of Queen Hatshepsut's daughter. Emdal considers Lady Pharaoh to be a sort of reinterpretation of the passage of the spirit to the "other side", an important rite in ancient Egypt. The bright and imaginative color transitions are, in the words of the artist, "...an artistic transposition of a visual sensation that one may feel when passing to other dimensions..."

An equally pertinent and more recent source of inspiration for Lady Pharaoh is the Fauvist movement, characterized by its strong colors, freed from narration, as well as Henri Matisse's Arcadian painting, Luxe, Calme et Volupté.

*“As if emerged from a blazing chrysalis realm of lanate dream
she dons her particolored mantle plaits mane and armour for passage attendant luminosity cascades from her honeycomb heart a rush of jewels spun from bloodbeats*

Is she angel or monarch warrior-prophet or psychopomp winged shadow-weaver she mistresses between heaven and earth in mystic montage of moss magenta and gold brushed with subtle secrets braced for release into futurelife „

TEXT TRANSLATIONS

(p. 34): Det er simpelthen så utroligt, som det flyder. Det er som vand eller smeltet metal. Og samtidig er der den faste struktur af tråde vævet sammen. Som fortid og fremtid. Jeg føler mig på en gang hensat til en lille landsby i det 13. århundrede omgivet af nødvendighed og soliditet og så et rumskib. Og mellem hav og strand. Lige der hvor vand og sand mødes. Det der mystiske sted, hvor elementer deler plads og skifter og ophæver grænser. Det er altså ret vildt. En sang, der på en gang binder os til Jorden, elementerne og så får øjnene til at løfte sig mod stjernehimlen og se den røde planet.

(p. 67): On the bottom of the sea, just off Judea, a snail slowly makes its way across the rocks. No goal, no direction, simply straight ahead, suddenly it finds itself in a willow woven fyke.

A sunburned man in a worn-out tunic, salt water up to his knees.

He pulls the fyke above the waves, his catch is worth a shrug.

They carefully pick out a gland from every snail, they are to be ground and laid in salt.

Then, they are warmed for ten days over a fire, but they must not boil!

They fill the dye into a large terracotta amphora, and then sail it to Rome.

The most delicate sheep wool turns purple.
200 000 snails went into coloring that toga.

On the day of the triumph, they wrap the proud general in his new toga.

Off through the city in his chariot, he waves, all cheer.
Behind him a slave, holding the laurel wreath, whispering into his ear:

'Remember: You are only human'.

(p. 97): My little Icelandic pony, my little Icelandic pony
"What is friendship all about?"

Your skin is like memory foam patiently giving in when touched what a responsibility it is to be a permanent impact

My skin is like an airbed, swollen, expanded, stubbornly insisting on regaining its original shape
when touched

Only when punctuated has someone really made an impact but not permanent

I'm thinking about whether friendship is all about being touched to make oneself tender to be moved not to dodge, not to harden up to be soft, to receive and to let oneself be groomed afterwards

I believe you are a good friend

You say that
"Friendship is magic"
and I try to comprehend it, so I can come closer
My little Icelandic pony
